PRESIDENT AND PEOPLE.

The New York Commercial is so impregnated with the fumes of democracy which is now a comparatively dead issue, that it sees nothing good or commendable in President Roosevelt, or in fact any other republican. Some of the democratic papers of the country might profitably close the discussion as to whether Bryan or Parker is most exemplary of the lamented Thomas Jefferson long enough to consider why democrats from Darkest Texas to the illuminated apartments of the silk stocking frolics in Chicago, are rivaling each other in paying homage to President Roosevelt. A new idea if not a new issue might be found to aid in the proposed reorganization of the party.

The common respect which all loyal American citizens commonly show for the chief executive officer of the government is unsatisfactory answer to the question why Mr. Roosevelt is able to draw more democrats together; and to awaken more hearty applause from them when assembled, than the best recognized leaders of the party. The time and manner of President McKinley's death served to emphasize the belief that he was the most universally popular among all of the presidents since the cultivation of the party spirit in this country; but he was never the recipient of honors and recognition from the partisan organizations of the opposition such as are being accorded to Roosevelt.

Has the absence of anything like a live, timely issue in the last two presidential campaigns served to destroy party feeling as well as to change party lines, or has President Roosevelt attracted democratic approval by support of principles and politics to which the opposition party is more strongly devoted than his own? The disposition of some of the leading democratic papers to ridicule both the strenuous life and the public addresses in advocacy of political morality and individual patriotism offered by the president may be accepted as an indication that these are not what appeals to the democratic heart with most force and effect. It is not time for the supporters of Parker and Bryan alike to consider whether the mass of the party is getting ready to support the republican leader, or to steal him?

One thing is certain, that if Roosevelt is renominated by the republicans four years hence, as there seems to be no doubt he will be, notwithstanding his declaration that he will not be a candidate, there will be no democrat in the United States that will care to run against him and the next presidential election promises to be what is called "unanimous."

After mature consideration the thought arises in the minds of many that possibly the term "tainted money" was, after all, no reflection on Mr. Rockefeller's honesty, but referred only to the never-called-in and never-washed United States currency. We all know how that is.

SMALL ARMIES.

Monaco's army consists of seventy-five carabinieri, the same number of guards and twenty firemen.

Liberia's army consists of 800 men, and 700 officers, a disproportion which might be remedied perhaps by reducing the enlisted force.

The army of Luxemburg has 135 gendarmes, 170 volunteers and 39 musicians, but the law provides that in time of war the volunteers may be temporarily increased to 250.

In the republic of San Marino the army, on a war footing under compulsory military service, is 950 men and thirty-eight officers. The peace footing of the army is sixty men.

Before it was disbanded the army of the young republic of Panama mustered 300 officers and men. Many of the latter were so young that they would still be wearing knee breeches if they lived in northern latitudes.

Lumber shipments from this port by water during the month of April were unusually heavy, the total number of feet set afloat since the 1st being 17,673,314. Of this, 11,155,000 went to coast ports and the remainder, 6,518,314 feet, to ports across the Pacific and down to the continent south of here.

Leading the foreign cargoes was that of the British bark Holt Hill, Hill which measured 1,975,955 feet. The Holt Hill cleared at the Custom-House on April 20 for Callao, Peru. She was followed on the 21st by the American schooner Alex T. Brown with 1,014,555 for Manila. Emigh and Koko Head, carried 1,230,973 and 1,417,731 feet, respectively, for Shanghai, both having cleared in the early part of the month.

San Pedro drew most of the coast shipments, cargoes to that port alone measuring 6,540,000 feet, or more than 50 per cent of the total coast shipments. San Francisco came in for nearly 4,000,000 feet, and the balance went to Redondo.
